

FIRST ANNOUNCEMENT AND CALL FOR PAPER
International Conference
“Towards net zero emissions: Policy and Practice”

To:

Achieving net zero emissions target to minimize climate change risks is a very challenging task, especially for developing countries. Besides reducing greenhouse gas emission in energy and other production processes, it is necessary to remove the existing greenhouse gases from the atmosphere and store it in soil, plants or materials in an amount equivalent to the amount of greenhouse gas emitted. In addition, achieving the net zero emission target must accompany a sustainable economic development to ensure continuous improvement of people’s life.

To facilitate the process of reaching the net-zero emission set up by Viet Nam Government and other governments in the world, the Hanoi University of Natural Resources and Environment (HUNRE), a multidisciplinary education and research institution in Viet Nam, has the plan to organize an international conference entitled: “Towards net zero emissions: Policy and Practice”. The conference is expected to provide an excellent international platform for local and international renowned scientists, experts, managers, and government officials from universities, research institutions, state agencies, non-governmental organizations and other organizations to exchange and share research results, experiences and academic expertise on the field of natural resources, environment, climate change, production technologies, financial mechanisms etc. toward achieving net zero target while ensuring sustainable economic development.

Details of the 2022 international conference organized by HUNRE are as follows:

- 1.1 Conference name: Towards net zero emissions: Policy and Practice
